Supermarket extraction

In 2012 Ramco were commissioned to undertake the removal of surplus catering equipment from over 500 stores throughout the UK on behalf of a major supermarket chain. The work spanned several months and to minimise disruption, was undertaken on Sundays.

The project covered the entire UK and entailed teams of three arriving on site by 8:00am Sunday morning with all the specialist equipment required including stair climbers; pallet jacks and hand tools. Site risk assessments had been undertaken in advance and each team was fully briefed beforehand about the agreed method statement. Due to the scale of the project Ramco would frequently have 10 teams working simultaneously at different locations throughout the UK!

Success was due to good planning; working to timescales and good communication with other contractors working on site, because as soon as we finished removals the new equipment went in!
